GHA links up with NHS Employers

The Gibraltar Health Authority (GHA) has entered into a formal agreement with the UK's NHS Employers, which will allow it access to the various services provided by that organisation.

These services include access to publications which include guidance and case studies, access to seminars and webinars on topics such as health and wellbeing at work, staff engagement, organisational development, raising concerns at work, equality and diversity, and support on all Human Resource issues.

Gill Bellord, Director of Employment Relations and Reward of NHS Employers, part of the NHS Confederation, and who is visiting Gibraltar, said, "I am delighted that we have formed a relationship with Gibraltar Health Authority. Staff are the most important asset a health service has, and we aim to provide practical support on all aspects of managing human resources, which in turn promotes better care for patients."

Minister for Health, Dr John Cortes said, "Gibraltar Health Authority will benefit greatly from being able to call on the experience and expertise of NHS Employers in improving as an organisation. Access to resources and advice from such an organisation will greatly assist the work that we do to improve staff issues, with clear benefits for what we do for patients and other service users."
