Airport Fire and Rescue Service Members Achieve Institution of Occupational Safety and Health (IOSH) Qualifications

Two members of the Airport Fire and Rescue Service successfully completed a course on Managing Safely which is accredited by the Institution of Occupational Safety and Health (IOSH), in association with the Safety Management Bureau Ltd.

As firefighters this course is most relevant serving to safely manage risks both operationally and in their daily work environment whilst also creating awareness of every individual's responsibilities and accountability for their actions.

This course gives managers and supervisors the underpinning knowledge and additional skills they need to manage health and safety within their teams enabling them to better identify and assess potential hazards, putting measures in place to safeguard everyone's well-being.

Leading Firefighters Tyrone Avellano and Shane MacDonald received their certificates from Mr Charles Zammit Director of Training Packages Gibraltar.
